Subject: LETTERS TO COVID-19 FRONTLINERS

Frontliners (medical professionals, health workers, safety and security personnel and essential services workers) serve as first responders to the COVID-19 pandemic. As frontliners, they are more exposed not only to contracting the virus, but also to the stress that may be caused by long working hours, fatigue, and stigma.

The Department of Education (DepEd) can play a big role in preventing overreaction, panic, hysteria, and media frenzy. Stigma and bullying are high risks. A way to prevent this is to promote solidarity/oneness with all our health workers. Children writing letters to the DOH, to doctors and nurses will be a good way of developing empathy to prevent bullying and stigma that can happen with quarantines and lockdowns.

We are also encouraging children to write letters of support to the doctors, nurses, and health workers of San Lazaro Hospital, Research Institute for Tropical Medicine (RITM), their local hospitals and the Department of Health (DOH) to thank them for taking good care of everyone. In short, create a culture of caring among everyone instead of creating fear about the virus.

Apart from our health workers, the letters are also intended for:

- Police and military peace officers
- Sanitation workers (janitors, custodial workers and garbage collectors)
